

Affordable Student Housing

On-campus student housing options include dorms, apartments, and learning communities. Although these options are located close to classrooms, dining halls, and other campus amenities, their prices exceed what some learners can pay. However, these degree-seekers need not live at home to reduce out-of-pocket expenses. Alternative, affordable student housing options may exist, depending on the school and surrounding area.

The following sections highlight off-campus housing opportunities for learners on a budget. Topics include ways to save money, benefits of living off campus, and tips for finding the right living situation. This guide also details additional resources for prospective renters.

Renting Your Own Apartment

Although more expensive than other options, renting an apartment allows individuals to live alone and explore various housing opportunities. Students renting an apartment by themselves must typically put down a security deposit and submit to a credit check. Some landlords also require a criminal background check.

Renting With Roommates

Renting with roommates lowers student housing costs significantly. Students with roommates often rent apartments and houses they could not afford by themselves. However, learners with roommates have less privacy and may need to deal with situations such as one roommate not paying rent on time.

Strategic Locations

One of Khazar University's key strategies for maintaining affordable rents without compromising on quality is to invest in well-connected locations rather than high-cost, central areas. By situating our properties near major transportation hubs and university campuses, we ensure that students can commute efficiently. By prioritising strategic locations, we can offer lower rental rates while still providing students with convenient access to their academic institutions, effectively alleviating both financial and psychological stress.
